

COVER LETTERS

And other career correspondence

In this tipsheet, you'll learn about key components and strategies that make the biggest difference when writing a cover letter for an employer. Some examples are provided as well as descriptions of other common career correspondences.

Your letter is your introduction

—it continues or starts a conversation about work or education

Just as you start a conversation by introducing yourself, a cover letter functions similarly to when you start a conversation by introducing yourself. Picture yourself sitting face-to-face with a person doing work that is interesting. What would you say? What do you want to ensure they know about you before you leave the room? Your letter is a chance to make a great first impression or continue a conversation that has already been started.

Your letter is something employers expect

—it shows your professionalism and helps them get to know you

Every time you submit a résumé, we highly recommend you to attach an accompanying letter. Even if they don't specifically request it, employers expect documentation from you that shows your professionalism and potential contributions. What better way to start than by using a cover letter?

Your letter should clearly show the match

*—it illustrates the connections between you and the work

Some employers scan your résumé first, while others start with the cover letter. To increase your chances of being invited to an interview, ensure that both documents clearly show the match between what the employer needs and what you can contribute. Once you have made the match, remember that the letter is your chance to stand out as an individual from the many other qualified applicants. Include information that supports and points to your résumé, without repeating it. Write professionally, using your own "voice". Give relevant evidence from your life that will help them remember you.

Craft and review any correspondence with care

—that includes cover letters, prospecting letters, thank-you letters and emails

Any correspondence you have with a potential colleague or employer will be evaluated. Use the same careful writing, editing, and reviewing techniques with all the correspondence you send. A great cover letter that is followed by an unprofessional, poorly-punctuated email can change their impression of you —and not necessarily in a positive way.

COVER LETTER BASICS

Letters should be:

- Maximum one page (generally)
- Double-spaced between paragraphs and sections
- Body of text spaced well on the page
- Same typeface as in résumé

Your Name

Street or PO Box City,
 Province Postal Code
 Telephone
 Email
 Date of writing

If sending a hard copy, use the same “letterhead” that appears on your résumé—it saves time, avoids mistakes and looks professional. Keep a copy of it in a template on your computer and use it in all your correspondence.

Name of recipient
 Recipient’s job title
 Organization
 Complete address

An actual person’s name is preferable. Check accuracy and spelling. Include address, even in an email.

Salutation (e.g. “Dear Ms. Gupta” or “ To Whom It May Concern”),

THE INTRODUCTION: In the first paragraph, tell the reader why you are writing. Essentially, give an indication of who you are (in context—not your name), what you want, and how you came to know about them. If you know it, include the position title for which you are applying. Note attachments/enclosures.

THE RESEARCH PIECE: Paragraph two distinguishes your letter from all the rest by telling the employer why you want to work for them. Let them know that you know what they do and why it matters to you. Show that you have investigated the organization and the work.

THE MATCH: In the next paragraph (or two), let them know why they should hire you. Highlight the major skills, personality traits and areas of knowledge and expertise that you have to offer, and indicate how you perceive your attributes match their needs. Include evidence of positive contributions and perhaps tell a brief story of when you have used some of the skills they require. Express yourself sincerely, and in a way that they can’t wait to turn the page and read your résumé.

THE CALL TO ACTION: Emphasize your interest in speaking with them and suggest possibilities for follow-up. Express appreciation.

Sincerely,

Your Name

Your Typed Name

For hard copies, Remember to sign the letter after you proofread carefully.
 For email just type your name

For hard copies, a minimum 1-inch margin on sides, top and bottom

Examples

Here are some examples of each section of a cover letter. Although the ordinary example in each pair is fine, try the techniques suggested in the tip section and applied in the better part of the examples. By using specifics and evidence from your own experiences, you make your letter distinctive and may motivate the employer to contact you.

THE INTRODUCTION:

Ordinary: I am a third year Biology student at Queen's University and I am applying for the position of Summer Camp Coordinator at Camp XYZ that was advertised through Career Services.

Tip: Highlight skills in context of an example or story.

Better: As I worked my 23rd hour last week to help put the finishing touches on the Science Formal, a friend remarked that I must really love to organize. I realized that she was right. Whether it's working on a lab report during a Biology lab or arranging a canoe trip as a camp counselor, helping things run smoothly has been one of my consistent contributions. I hope this characteristic and experience will be helpful to the role of Summer Camp Coordinator, advertised through Career Services at Queen's.

THE RESEARCH PIECE:

Ordinary: Company XYZ is world-renowned and known for producing high quality aerospace products. With all the opportunities and exciting projects that exist, Company XYZ would be a great place for me to start my career.

Tip: Tell them why what they do matters to you.

Better: As a graduating engineer who has very strong interests in aeronautical engineering and a long-term reader of aerospace publications, I find Company XYZ very intriguing. I am very enthusiastic about military aviation with sound knowledge of aerospace concepts, including the new Joint Strike Fighter being developed by XYZ and the continuing evolution of the F/A-18 Hornet. I have particular interest in the development of thrust vectoring technology after seeing several programs covering this field of propulsion. I hope to one day be a part of future XYZ aerospace advances.

THE MATCH:

Ordinary: I have a great deal of experience that would benefit Walk Home including work as the Assistant Director at Toronto Parks and as a volunteer with the Queen's Sexual Health Resource Centre. I also worked as a Queen's Gael during orientation last year. All these positions required sensitivity, tact, and the ability to deal with people from a variety of differing backgrounds.

Tip: Create a visual so the employer can see you doing the work.

Better: As a Gael during the ASUS Orientation Week, I witnessed a student hit by a car. I drew on my safety training as a Gael and a long-time lifeguard and ran to the nearest blue light to call for help. Once the ambulance had arrived, I rushed to the Nerve Centre and alerted the Orientation Week Executive. This ability to work calmly in high-pressure situations is essential for a Walk Home staff person.

THE CALL TO ACTION:

Ordinary: Thank you for reviewing my qualifications. I hope to hear from you soon.

Tip: Make it easy for them to contact you.

Better: Thank you for reviewing my qualifications. During the week of February 18-22 I will be in the Toronto area and would be happy to answer any questions you have in person. You can also reach me any time via the email address above.

Career correspondence - More ways to make a connection

Networking Message

You might want to connect with people who work within fields that particularly interest you. Start with people you know personally and professionally then expand your search to include people you would like to connect with. The focus of these messages should be learning about the day-to-day work and the profession/sector. A networking message/email can be used to introduce yourself and request to connect. Please attend our Networking Workshop and/or read the Networking tipsheet to learn more.

Prospecting Letter

Since 80% of work may not be currently advertised, an effective work search includes approaching organizations that are of interest to you by writing “prospecting” letters/emails. Although these letters are not targeting an advertised job, it is still important to be specific about your match with the organization and the work. This shows your genuine interest to employers and position you for potential opportunities that arise in the future. However, we recommend that you do this along with other networking strategies.

Statements of Interest

Statements of Interest often form part of a larger application package. You may be asked to write your statement in a form or as an essay with a word limit. Whatever format is requested, the key is to follow any specified guidelines carefully while capturing the reader’s interest. Read the Research and Personal Statements tipsheet for further support.

Thank-you Letter

Although the use of thank-you letters is advocated very strongly, most people still do not remember to use them. As a result, those who do, make a big impact. Thank-you letters/emails can be very effective when in contact with prospective education programs or employers, interviewers/recruiters and people you have spoken to through networking.

For more information and examples of these types of letters, please refer to the Queen’s Best Cover Letters magazine!

In addition to cover letters, there are many other types of letters that you will find useful in your correspondence with prospective employers and education programs.

Be professional when using e-mail

If sending an e-mail, avoid the temptation to simply dash off a quick note. Have someone check all your correspondence to ensure that the grammar is polished and the text is error-free. Avoid the overly casual tone and lack of punctuation that pervades many e-mails. Use the same care that you would if you were writing an application or résumé. Leave a professional, lasting impression.

A clear and personal writing style is the natural complement to an effective set of interviewing skills.
